

ENERGY STAR[®] CERTIFIED

NEW CONSTRUCTION

Date:

Conditional ENERGY STAR Certification Disclosure

Congratulations on your new home!

To earn certification through the ENERGY STAR Multifamily New Construction Program, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) requires that all units and common spaces in a building be independently verified to meet its rigorous requirements for energy efficiency.

While the ENERGY STAR verification process for your unit has been completed, construction in the building is still ongoing, and final verification is pending in some areas. Because this additional activity must be completed, your home has been conditionally certified at this time.

Your builder has committed to meeting all remaining ENERGY STAR program requirements in the building and completing the required verification process for those areas that are still under construction. Once this has been completed, you will receive a notification that the final building verification is complete, and your home will be fully certified. You should expect to receive this confirmation on or before .
